Stay connected on the slopes this winter with the latest Uniden two-way handheld radio

Skiing season has arrived and packing the right equipment is essential to keeping safe on the slopes. Whether it's a family trip or with friends, communication on the slopes can be tricky due to loss of mobile phone coverage, or risk of damage to an expensive phone.

The compact Uniden UH35-2 series two-way handheld radio combines performance, robust design and ease-of-use for better group communication. Offered in an adventure camouflage design, the radio neatly clips onto ski active wear with ease. The camouflage design is distinctive so easy to spot if dropped in the snow.

The ultra-compact, shock resistant and temperature tested radios are perfect to use while skiing, snowboarding or trekking cross country. With access to up to 80 channels, Uniden's handheld radios are affordable and reliable, particularly high up on the mountain range.

The radios provide superior range and more efficient battery performance when compared with standard UHF radios in the market. The UH35-2 operates up to 20 hours and can communicate across a range of over three kilometres. Depending on the location of the local repeater station and topographical conditions, the communication range can be extended further using the Range Extender (Duplex) Capability. Auto Squelch blocks out low-level hissing noises for a stronger incoming signal and clearer messages.

Uniden also offer a triple coloured radio pack UH35-3 and quad coloured radio pack UH35-4 for those who like colour co-ordination with ski wear. With three or four brightly coloured designs to choose from, users can choose a colour to suit their personality.

Other convenient features include an LCD screen, Auto Battery Save to conserve power when in standby mode and a Battery Level indicator.
