

5 tech tips for new parents

The arrival of a baby will drive many expecting mums and dads to shop for all the essentials needed to welcome their new addition. Preparing the home and in particular, the nursery, can help to create a welcoming haven for baby, with all the practical features to help parents with their new routine. Uniden shares its top five tips for using a baby monitor to help the household run smoothly both day and night.

1. Upstairs downstairs

A baby monitor with a large colour screen lets parents both see and listen out for baby during nap times, or calm baby with some softly spoken words, while being able to carry on with other jobs or look after older siblings in another part of the home. This is particularly useful when bedrooms are on another level of the home, avoiding the need to run up and down stairs at regular intervals. Look for baby monitors with a night vision feature to provide clear visibility even when lights are out.

2. Soothe them to sleep

There's no need to have multiple gadgets cluttering the nursery. Baby monitors, like the Uniden Baby Watch (BW3451R+1), include a selection of lullabies that can be played to create a calm environment to help babies drift off to sleep.

3. Stay connected while you're away

For parents who are often away for work, features such as the Uniden Baby Watch app allow travellers to stay connected with baby remotely. There is even the option to wirelessly zoom, pan and tilt the camera, as well as talk to baby via a walkie talkie function.

4. A comfortable room

Keeping babies comfortable in any season is important, particularly when they're asleep. Baby monitors can include a temperature display with a temperature range alert to let parents know when there is a change in the room environment.

5. Clamp anywhere camera

For greater flexibility, look for a product with a clamp-style camera. This can be mounted to the side of a cot for the perfect viewing angle.
